This is not science fiction for science fiction's sake; it's a deeply researched adventure through the annals of time that will inspire readers of all ages to think more broadly about their place in the world and what we may be capable of achieving in the future. Follow us through what some call the last frontier as we travel back to Earth's earliest beginnings as we find out "who" we were and "what" has happened to us since. The Time Machine (2002) is a British - Australian science fiction film directed by Simon Hunter and written by Steve Long Mitchell and Robert L. Freedman. It was released on 14 October 2002 in the US and on 14 December 2002 in Australia. The film features the voices of: Angelina Ball as Meg, Hugh Jackman as Frank, David Fielding as Jim, Stephen Moore as Dr. Alan Grant, Martin Landau as Edward Prendick and Sam Neill as Geoff Prendick. In a small English village in 1868, a man named Geoff Prendick discovers a machine that doesn't seem to have been built by humans. He tries to show his wife, Amelia, but she refuses to believe him. A few days later he encounters the Time Traveller and hops on after him to find out where he's going. In the 26th Century, forces from the future have erased most of Earth's memory about humans from Earth's past and caused it to resemble a tropical paradise where human life is endangered by loathsome hybrids called the Eloi. The Eloi are slowly rising up against their brutal rulers who are addicted to time travel technology known as Chronospheres. The Time Traveller explains that in the future, humanity created its own downfall by changing the past to suit their current needs. He leaves Geoff in this bleak world, where there are no humans left alive besides him and the Eloi. The Time Traveller leaves Geoff with a piece of equipment to help him get back to his time if he so desires. After being attacked by an android, he takes refuge with the Eloi, including their queen Weena. Geoff discovers that while all technology has been destroyed by the FUTUREGEN cleanup operations, some technology is still operational underground due to the effects of time dilation. In the process of trying to escape from a machine, he meets a scientist named Dr. Alan Grant who has been exploring the technology and works with him to activate a working machine. In the past, Amelia becomes interested in her husband's disappearance and discovers that he has been missing for months. She goes into his cabin and finds a note explaining what happened to him. She then goes into town where she is attacked by two thugs, but before they can kill her the Time Traveller appears and saves her life. He takes Amelia with him on his time machine to 12 million BC, where humanity first emerged from savagery, via an underground transport system under London that still exists in the present day.
